

Poems

Fairy Power

By: Kate MacDonald-Dunbar

There are some fairies who have moved into our area not the usual sweet flower-fairy type, these seem dark

You won't find them granting wishes, there's no charm this group is here to be remembered, to leave a mark

As an elder, it behooves me to have a friendly little chat to diplomatically explain the crucial error of their ways

This does not go as planned because Sinicity tells me that treading lightly, asking nicely, as a choice, never pays

She says her flight of fairies operates when daylight fades that's the time when pixies sprites and elves will run amuck until suddenly Sinicity and her aerial crew surrounds them telling them to move on quietly, tonight they're out of luck

Kate MacDonald-Dunbar

Kate MacDonald-Dunbar is a retired septuagenarian who started to write just over sixteen months ago. She has many hobbies, but writing helps to fill an insomniac's dark quiet hours. She has had seventeen poems and six short stories published, online and in print: Chris Fielden's "Nonsensically Challenged," for charity. High Shelf Press volume XXIII. WinglessDreamer. Spillwords Press. 805 Lit and Art. Funny Pearls. Little Old Lady Comedy. Dillydoun Review. The World of Myth Magazine.