

Poems

Autism Awareness Acrostic

By: Timothy Law

Timothy Law

Timothy Law is a writer of fantasy, horror, detective and general fiction from a little town in Southern Australia called Murray Bridge. A happily married father of three children, family is very important to him. Currently working at the Murray Bridge Library in the role of Library Manager he has dreamed since his early high school years of becoming a full-time author. Working for a library, surrounded by so many wonderful authors it is difficult not to be inspired to write. Many of his short stories and general musings can be found on his blog <http://somecallmetimmy.blogspot.com.au/> or on Parenting Express website.

All of us different, none of us is the same
Why can't we all see how this benefits the game?
Are our eyes so tightly shut that we refuse to see
Reality is different for him, for her, for you, for me
Everyone knows someone who knows someone that is unique
Never believe we are merely gentle souls, mild and meek
Even though we might be silent, or loudly we do what we do
See the world through our eyes, discovering what's true
So, we ask for understanding, that it is one world for us and a whole different world for you

